

Teach About Women

Our Mission

We bring intersectional feminist and gender-inclusive resources into K-12 classrooms

Our Approach

Change Policy: We petition for change and rewrite educational policy and learning standards to include rich and intersectional material on women and gender.

Change Classrooms: We build online databases, offer workshops, form working groups, and create materials to give educators the resources and practices they need to teach about women and the complex, intersectional history of gender roles.

Build Communities: We cultivate supportive networks through strategic partnerships, social media, and events that encourage collaboration to make classrooms equitable and empowering places for all students.

#teachaboutwomen

History classrooms around the country present a false reality.

53% of the time US History standards mention women, it is in domestic roles.

#intersectionalfeminism

US History programs name almost no women of color.

8% of those women named in US History standards have Hispanic heritage—4% are Native American. 0% are Asian.

Sign our petition.

—
Follow us on Instagram.

—
March with us
on January 19!

Where are all the women?

“Each time a girl opens a book and finds a womanless history, she learns she is worth less.”

-Myra Pollack Sadker

Change policy. Change classrooms. Build communities.

Source: Where are the women? A Report on the Status of women in the United States Social Studies Standards by the National Women's History Museum

<https://www.womenshistory.org/social-studies-standards>

These statistics describe state standards around the country for teaching US history. Textbook companies base their content on state standards so these statistics affect students in public, charter, and independent schools. Students deserve a more complete picture of the human experience.

Follow us on Instagram.
@TeachAboutWomen

Sign our petition.
www.TeachAboutWomen.org/NYSpetition

March with us
on January 19!